Mayor Mallory, UC, Zoo, Children’s, and Uptown Consortium Call for Action to Help Build MILK/I-71 Interchange

American Jobs Act contains $27 billion for highway construction

Cincinnati – Mayor Mark Mallory, the University of Cincinnati, The Cincinnati Zoo and Botanical Gardens, Cincinnati Children’s, and the Uptown Consortium today called on Congress to take action to help communities with major transportation infrastructure projects. They spoke specifically about the proposed new interchange connecting Martin Luther King Drive to Interstate 71.

“Uptown is our second largest jobs center, yet it has a terrible connection to the highway. If we could build this interchange, it would not only put people to work in the construction of the exit, but it would also allow the employers in the Uptown area to grow by having safer and more efficient access to the highway,” Mayor Mark Mallory said.

President Obama’s American Jobs Act contains $27 billion for projects to make the national highway system safer and more efficient. The new interchange between MLK Drive and I-71 is a $56 million project that is currently in the planning stage. However, a key aspect of the President’s plan is that it will target high impact, job-creating infrastructure projects that could be fast tracked by streamlining federal review and permitting processes. The MLK/I-71 interchange could be expedited because of its significance to Cincinnati’s economy.
