

Medical Jobs On The Rise In U.S.

Labor Statistics Bureau Releases Findings Showing Job Growth in Medical Field

June 4, 2012 (New York City) - The U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics has released encouraging figures showing that employment growth in healthcare will continue to increase through 2016. Job growth will be especially high for those working outside the inpatient hospital sector, although all areas of healthcare will see steady growth. Between 2006 and 2016 it is expected that approximately 647,000 new jobs will have been added due to the increased demand for medical services.

Avalon University School of Medicine (www.AvalonU.org) is featured on the cover of USA Today's June 2012 Special Supplement focusing on Careers in Healthcare. The supplement is designed to showcase the ever-growing career opportunities in the healthcare sector. More than ever before the need for qualified physicians and specialists in the healthcare field has reached critical proportions. Dr. Shokat Fatteh, Chancellor of Avalon University School of Medicine, noted "What makes our school unique is that it was founded by experienced physicians who teach a curriculum combining theoretical and practical knowledge. Our state-of-the-art classrooms and facilities are designed to enhance each individual student's learning experience while providing a safe and stimulating environment. By keeping up to date on the latest advances in medicine, we strive to produce an alumni prepared to serve the needs of their communities effectively".

In recent years, preventative medicine has been an important focus in medical school curriculums. This increased demand for qualified medical providers is the reason Avalon University is committed to emphasizing the importance of patient-centered care. The school and its faculty hope the students of today will become the medical pioneers of tomorrow.

USDA Joins Nation's Communities to Feed Children during Summer Meal Gap

By Kevin Concannon, USDA Under Secretary for Food, Nutrition and Consumer Services

While the kids are exuberantly shouting, "School's out!" many parents may be quietly worrying just how they're going to feed their kids all summer long. I want to assure those moms, dads and caregivers that USDA has a program that can help.

All it takes is a toll free phone call to find a USDA Summer Food Service Program (SFSP) site where children in low-income areas can get a free meal during the summer months when schools are closed. The National Hunger Hotline (1-866-3-HUNGRY or 1-866-348-6479) can give you locations of Summer Food Service Program sites open in your local area. Just provide your zip code and the Hotline operator will tell you if there is a site near where you live. This information is also available to Spanish speakers, 1-877-8-HAMBRE.

Summer meals are free for children 18 and under at open sites. In addition to a healthy meal, the program offers enjoyable learning activities held in a safe place where kids can play with friends and make new ones.

Summer meal sites are located at libraries, schools, family centers, youth drop-in centers, park and recreation centers, faith-based organizations, day camps and food banks, and many other locations where children come together during the summer months. Sites offer activities such as arts and crafts, drama, sports, computer training, music and reading that keep kids interested and coming back day after day. I've personally visited many sites and know that the kids have a great time and enjoy good meals.

We need to spread the word so that more families, parents and children know about this program and can find a site in their community. I encourage parents and sponsoring organizations to work with their schools to send Summer Food Service Program flyers and other outreach materials home with students before the end of school. Our Website, www.summerfood.usda.gov includes templates for creating these materials.

SFSP is vitally important to the millions of kids who eat school lunch and school breakfast during the school year but have no nutritious alternative in the summer. Only 3 million of the 22 million students who receive free or reduced price meals in the National School Lunch Program participate in a summer feeding program either through SFSP or through their school.

Summertime should not be a hungry time for these kids. SFSP fills that gap. Healthy food gives kids energy so they can enjoy all the summertime fun, but also maintains their nutrition so they feel well and do well once they're back in school.

At USDA, we're committed to ensuring that all students have access to "food that's in while school is out." We are here to help parents and communities make that a reality this summer.
